gives us reason to hope that a ghostly reformation has actually begun, and that at least a few of the swarming millions of hitherto lazy and frivolous gnosts have de-termined to do something to redeem the damaged reputation of their kind. That a ghost should choose to visit St. Louis is not, of course, creditable to ghostly taste, but the individual ghost just referred to went to St. Louis exclusively in the interests of humanity. A week or two since a St. Louis family were annoyed by the nightly ringing of the front-door bell by invisible hands. The local small boy and the household rats were in turn charged with the offence of malicious bell-ringing, but no proof of their guilt could be obtained. An astute plumber, whose advice was sought, alleged that the bell-ringing was due to electricity, and he accordingly undertook to suppress the nuisance by changing the direction of the bellwire and putting in new gas-pipes and water-pipes throughout the house. Though his bill was of the most formidable proportions, the mysterious bell-ringing was not checked, and the household gradually accepted it as a necessary evil which no carthly remedy could cure. Of course, the bell was rung by a ghost, and when the latter found that no further good could be accom-plished in that direction, she—for the ghost was of the gentler sex—changed her tactics. She adopted the habit of singing songs in the front parlor, accompanying her voice by playing on a closed and locked piano-forte. After thus opening the evening's entertainment she would move pictures, chairs, and bedsteads all over se, and execute more noisy carpenter-work with an invisible hammer and saw than any live carpenter with a proper sense of loyalty to his carpenters' union would be willing to do in a week of consecutive labor. Her most remarkable feats, however, were performed in connection with small both actual and ghostly. The family were frequently astonished and delighted by seeing their private small boy suddenly raised by the hair two or three feet above the floor, and thus borne kicking and shricking from the room. Unfortunately the ghost always brought him back again, imbued with a sense of injury which led him to lie down on the floor and howl until his disappointed parents pacified him with the bootjack or other convenient and soothing instrument. The ghost's efforts to drive the family to despair were not, however, successful until she adopted the plan of causing ghostly small boys to emerge from the fire-place and other unexpected localities. When the persecuted residents of the haunted house found that they could not open a closet or unlock a burglar-proof safe or remove the head of a whiskey barrel without being shocked at the prompt apwithout being shocked at the prompt appearance of a shadowy and unnaturally signst small boy, they became utterly demorlent small boy, they became utterly demoralized and sent for a spiritual medium to negotiate terms of peace with their tormentor. Now, what is remarkable and unprecedented in ghostly history is the motive assigned by the ghost for her prolonged disturbance of the household. She asserted, through the medium, that the lady of the house had once promised to treat her dead sister's small boy as her own, and that instead of keeping this promise she had farmed him out to a heartless baby farmer. The accused woman admitted with tears that such bad been her faithless and wicked conduct, and she gladly acceded to the ghostly demand to send for the injured small boy, and to treat him with the ut- the store. promise the ghost agreed to withdraw from the premises, threatening, however, to return and make things disagreeably lively for the family in case the promise should not be kept. The boy was sent for and the not be kept. The boy was sent for and the ghost withdrew; and thus the first known philanthropic ghost accomplished her humane purpose. To say that this exceptional ghost deserves the respect and gratitude of all humane people is hardly necessary. It is to be hoped, however, that she will not content herself with having performed one good action. What she ought to do is to form a ghostly society for the prevention of cruelty to children. Such a society could accomplish far more than any merely human society can hope to do, and all honest and kind-hearted ghosts can rest assured man society can hope to do, and all honest and kind-hearted ghosts can rest assured that if they will only enter upon a life of active benevolence by persecuting cruel parents and guardians they will soon earn the admiration of mankind and reinstate themselves in the good opinion of the living.—New York Times.

A SINGULAR MAN .- There lives in this city n young man who is perhaps one of the most eccentric beings known. He lives in a small room, and no human being has ever been known to darken his chamber door. He cleans up his own room; has his water brought to the door by a servant, takes it in himself; he will not wear a pair of shoes if they are both made on the same last; always has his shoes and clothing made to order; has the shoe or boot for the left foot pegged and the one for the right His shirts are made open at both sides and fastened with hooks and eyes. He will never wear a garment if a woman puts a stitch in it. He never was known to utter a vulgar or profane word; never used any kind of liquors or tobacco, but chews assafætida as a substitute for the narcotic weed, and drinks abscinthe for whiskey. His diet is entirely vegetable; he has been known a few times in his life to eat the legs of a bull-frog; tea and coffee are unknown to his palate. He never laughs, but always speaks pleasantly and seems to be in a good humor. He will not do any kind of work on Tuesdays; spends that day in reading the Bible and religious tracts; holds divine JAVA. service in his own room. Taking all these eccentricities together, he is one of the most singular characters we have ever met .-Danville Express.

THE POETESS "UNA."-Mrs. Mary A. Ford, "Una," the well-known Irish-American poetess, is dead. She was held in very high estimation by the Irish-American and Catholic press of the country. Her "Washington's Farewell to His Army," "A Hundred Years from Now," "The Green and Gold," the "Men of Rutli," and "God Pity the Poor," are esteemed among the finest things in the English language.—Irish EDITOR OR EDITRESS.—[From the Burlington Hawk-Eye.]—It would make Horace Greeley turn over in his grave if he could hear the Iowa papers calling Miss Clagett, of the Keokuk Constitution, an editress. We presume these same papers look upon for sale by her as a brilliant young journalistess, and my 8 understand that she will be her own business manageress, and will hope that she will succeed equally well as an editress and publisheress, and a moulderess of public opinion, and predict that she will be a leaderess in local literary circles, a position which her attainments as a scholaress and ability as a writeress entitle her to take.

At this season, the question which in-terests a boy is not so much whether his life will be erowned with glory and honor, as whether his new summer vest is going to be made out of his father's old trousers .- Norwich Bulletin.
